

raising faithful children in media cultures

22 may 2011

where I hope to go with you

- this is an adaptive challenge
- key to understanding media is understanding practice
- best analogy might be to food
- what are good practices?
- how does this intersect with faith?
- Q&A

adaptive challenge

messy, no clear answer or technique will suffice, changing contexts, learning together so we learn...

with each other with our children

to understand media you need to understand practice media practice is about communication and relationality analogies?

best one might be to food

food

- we all require it to survive
- we are embedded in a culture that offers us a lot of unhealthy choices
- the artful practices of preparing and eating food are stressed if not extinct
- no clear social consensus

media

- we require communication to survive
- we are offered a lot of unhealthy communication practices
- artful practices of preparing and engaging in communication are stressed if not extinct
- no clear social consensus

so what are we to do?

analogies

- help families develop healthy practices around media
- encourage a diverse media diet
- encourage the production of media
- provide ways to share more communally in consuming pre-produced media and what about faith in all of this?

we know that faith has to be nurtured at home, although community matters

we know that practices matter we remember that God is always with us in the midst of our journeys some examples, NOT definitive!

for young children

- limit commercially produced media consumption
- for the times you do engage media, put good pieces in front of them (Common Good radio, Children's literature, etc.)
- institute table prayers and practices (candles, etc.)
- invite a biblical imagination into daily practice (Bible Stories for the 40 days)

for school age kids

- invite them to create media (MyPopStudio, animoto, etc.)
- watch media together
- have clear family practices around media use
- diversify your media diet
- choose media with deep theological themes to engage together
- choose Wii over XBox or PS3 (or at least add Kinect)

for teens

- play and learn online together
- set clear guidelines for family media use
- provide opportunities to create in media
- practice open and engaged communication in any medium
- engage in service together
- participate with them in social media for adults

- choose the Net over cable tv
- diversify your media diet
- develop a thoughtful news diet
- learn with young people
- create in media

remember

- practices by which we engage media are more determinative than media content
- emerging technologies make engaging media an adaptive challenge
- faith emerges in every context, God is present
- support families with media in ways that you support families to have healthy food practices
- support families with faith practices that engage and produce media

Q & A

more info

mhess@luthersem.edu

<http://www2.luthersem.edu/mhess/web/faithfulchildren.html>